

Beware 'Hardening of Categories'

Protect Heritage, Hall Urges

Dr. Henry F. Hall said yesterday that education in the technical age could threaten individuality.

Addressing the annual convention of the Provincial Association of Catholic Teachers, the principal emeritus of Sir George Williams University said:

"I urge you as Catholic teachers to hang on to the heritage which affirms that each person is a child of God and, therefore, unique and special.

"Of course we have to classify our pupils," he said. "We even have to pass or fail them perhaps, but let us not be overtaken by the educational disease which someone has called 'hardening of the categories'."

Dr. Hall said rapid change in society is one of the major problems of formal education today.

"You who are younger may well face the time and the circumstances in which many youth will prepare not for a life of work as we know it at least, but for a quite different kind of social and recreational activity.

"The implications of this are almost frightening," he said.

The kind of education most significant for the learner is that which is "most immediate and meaningful," Dr. Hall stated.

"The earlier and the more direct the application can be to real life, the more effective is the learning process."

The most important result of the broad range of education is, he said, "the continuous discovery by the individual of a meaning and purpose of life itself."

And "the quality of life which the teacher communicates has a meaning far beyond our common suppositions."
